THE MOUNTAIN.

Large chested giant, shadowing the land,
With lazy limbs stretched out at length,
Covered with shag and gnarled with strength,
I watch thee day by day,
A hemlock hear the staff of thy huge hand,
Driving along the accustomed upward trail
Thy flecks of mist that morn and even stray
Acress the vale!

Pressing with sun browned body earth's green

The golden days of summer through,
With half veiled eyes of melting blue
O'er which the shadows fit—
What dreams are thine, that with a magic

Thy spirit to contentment they beguile,
And o'er thy brow, where rugged frowns
might sit,
Persuade a smile?

When the empurpled curtain of the gloom
Drops slowly from its loosened cord,
Across her rose flushed terrace toward
The purlicus of thy rest,
I watch the figure of the evening come,
One starry brooch upon her shoulder shining,
And lean upon thy broad and loving breast,
With arms entwining.

Warden art thou of all the trooping stars.

Through the hushed hours of night they wait

wait
Upon the threshold of thy gate
Of pine trees that uprears
Itself against the sky. Oft, too, those bars
Behind, fresh from some fountain bath, is seen
The moon, when with her quiver she appears, A huntress queen.

ARE WE CIVILIZED!

One Who Analyzes Fashions Says We Are Still Half Savage.

The prevailing motive not to appear singular accounts for the continuance of certain fashions, many being the results of superstition, religious observances and the desire to be "up to date."
We are acquainted with what facility hair may be fashioned into various fantastic shapes for personal adornment, and when a part through the middle is decreed it is worn without regard to contour, and whether it may add to or de-tract from one's intellectual appearance no thought is given.

If fashion says crimp, we crimp; if curl and wave, we obey. And the custom of keeping the head closely shaved prevails, as among the Fijian women, while the men cultivate long hair, thus reversing the conditions met with among highly civilized nations.

The lips, ears and nose offer a variety of possible alterations and are a means of ornamental display, and, says Captain Cook, over a hundred years ago, in acscribing the naked savages on the east coast of Australia, their principal form of ornamentation was a bone, which they thrust through the cartilage which divides the nostrils from each other. The lip ornamentations by the Bolocudo Indians and the Tlinket Bella are disgusting in the extreme, and in the heart of Africa among the Bongo women a clamp or clasp is worn at the corners of the mouth, as if they wanted to contract the orifice and literally put a curb on its possibilities.

The teeth cannot escape, and the Ma-lays view in disgust the natural tint and stain theirs a jet black.

One views in horror the Chinese method of foot binding, but which is much mitigated when considering by degrees the fashionable toe used in the last cen-

Thus we can see that fashion's fetters torture and harass equally civilized men and savage vanity. Are we not the same in kind, but differing only in degree from the savage?—New York Adver-

Edmund Halley.

Probably the greatest service which Halley ever rendered to human knowledge was the share which he took in bringing Newton's "Principia" before the world. In fact, as Dr. Glaisher, writing in 1888, has truly remarked, "but for Halley the 'Principia' would not have existed."

Halley had the genius to perceive the tremendous importance of Newton's researches, and he ceased not to urge upon the somewhat recluse man of science the necessity for giving his discoveries publication. Having been authorized by the Rayal society to undertake the printing the book at his own expense, Halley pared no pains in pushing forward the publication of his illustrious friend's great work, so much so that in the same year he was in a position to present a complete copy to King James II, with a proper discourse of his own. Halley also wrote a set of Latin hexameters, in praise of Newton's genius, which he printed at the beginning of the work. The last line of this specimen of Halley's poetic muse may be thus rendered, "Nor mortals nearer may approach the gods."—Sir Robert Ball in Good Words.

Eighteen Hundred Years After Death.

When the pick used by the excavator at Pompeii gives forth a hollow sound when striking the great bed of lava, care is immediately taken to open the cavity that is known to be near. Into this cavity liquid plaster of paris is poured. The cavity serves as a mold, and the plaster soon hardens. When the lava has been removed, the statue obtained usually proves to be that of a woman or man in the agonizing convulsions of death, the limbs contorted and the features drawn out of shape just as they were when the person was overtaken by the flood of redhot lava 1,800 years ago. -St. Louis Republic.

According to Professor Aristide Marre, a distinguished French linguist, the name of the Madagascar capital. Antananarivo, means "city of the thousand villages." It is composed of the Malagasy words "an" (the), "tanana" (village), "rivo" (thousand).

Farewell originally signified may yen fare or travel well or in safety.

A TRAGIC ADVENTURE.

The Thrilling Sequel to the Hanging of a

"Everybody remembers when the great Texas murderer, Dick Masters, was hanged," said E. M. Cary of Waco, "but the strange death of Sheriff Win-ters, who sprung the trap, has been kept out of the papers. After Masters' body was cut down, the county physician pro-nouncing the murderer dead, the sheriff ordered four deputies to carry the body to his private laboratory, where he used to pursue his medical experiments alone. He was bound to dissect the powerful, well developed body of Masters, so he shut himself up with the corpse and went to work. The sheriff moved about briskly, making a great clatter with his instru-ments. Several times he went to the windows and peered out, but the neighborhood was deserted. He soon discovered that the drop on the scaffold had not broken Masters' neck, and the sher-iff thought that was fortunate, as he always had experimented on the restoration of life whenever opportunity afforded. He jaid down his instruments and began to try and restore life. The even-ing shadows drifted into night. It was a noisy town and the shouts and laughter of revelers could be heard every where. Several times the crowds pass ing the sheriff's room thought they heard the sounds of scuffling, and more than once a muffled shout was heard. But the pleasure seekers on the streets passed along without giving a thought to this.

On the following day Sheriff Winters failed to appear at his office. Nobody had seen him since he locked himself in the laboratory with Masters' body. Finally the mayor of the town and several departs sheriffs want to the laborated heariffs want to the laborated departs sheriffs want to the laborated by the laborated departs sheriffs want to the laborated departs to the laborated departs sheriffs want to the laborated departs and departs the laborated departs and departs and departs and departs the laborated departs and departs eral deputy sheriffs went to the labora-tory, but rapping at the door nor shouts would bring any answer. Then they broke open the door. The sight before them nearly turned their hair gray. The room was a total wreck. The furniture was strewn about the room, smashed to pieces, and everything bore evidence of a terrible struggle. Sheriff Winters lay on the floor, dead, and the marks about his throat showed that he had been strangled. A few feet away lay the dead body of the murderer, Masters. The faces and the garments of both men bore evidence of a hard fight. The only conclusion that could be arrived at was that Masters had revived, and on regaining consciousness and strength he attacked the sheriff and succeeded in killing him before he died himself. All this happened in the jail of Rio Grande county."—Kansas City Journal.
